Individual instruction, special class methods, indeed, the concentrated efforts of an entire school system, are unable to wipe out the major differences of this kind in a dozen years. As a rule, the longer the child is in school, the more evident the inferiority of the inferior child becomes. It would hardly be reasonable, therefore, to expect that a little incidental experience and instruction in the home, amounting perhaps in most cases to not more than a few minutes per day, would weigh very heavily against these native differences. Even in good homes, children are likely to learn less from their parents than from their play fellows and nurses. For further evidence on the relation of school success to social status, we will examine the age-grade distribution of the children in the five social groups. This is shown in Table 27 for the ages 8-16. Children below 8 were omitted from this comparison because they have not had time to become much retarded or accelerated in school. Normal progress is here defined as Grade II at Age 8, Grade III at Age 9, etc. 2 See J. D. Houser: The relation of ability to general intelligence and to meaning vocabulary. The Elementary School Journal, Dec, 1915. The correlation here is positive, but somewhat smaller than in the case of the intelligence quotient, the teachers estimates of intelligence, and the quality of the school work. This is what...
