The 2030 Caregiving Crisis: A Heavy Burden for Boomer Children

By Henry Moss

BookBaby, United States, 2015. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book. The U.S. lacks a long-term care system. The closest it has is Medicaid, a safety net program for the very poor. According to the Department of Health and Human Services, 90 of older persons receiving help with activities of daily living (ADLs) in 2011 relied on some informal care, from family members and friends. About two thirds relied on only informal care. Family and friends collectively provided 7580 of total care hours in non-institutional settings. Synthesizing the latest research, this book argues that we are underestimating the extent of caregiving need for baby boomers when they become the oldest old in 2030-2050. It also suggests we are overestimating boomer health and wealth. Disability levels will likely grow beyond expectations, through an increasing incidence and prevalence of dementia, mobility disorders, and general frailty, the result of increasing levels of obesity, hypertension, and atherosclerosis. Correspondingly, the caregiving situation will get much worse. The tidal wave of boomer retirement is upon us along with the birth dearth that followed. Family caregivers, adult children in particular, face bleak prospects. Adult children of boomers will be dealing...
