Excerpt: . . . came delirious on the seventh day, and died that evening. SECTION II. HYDROCELE OF THE TUNICA VAGINALIS. In an healthy state of the body there is always a small quantity of fluid found in the cavity of this tunic. It exhales from the capillary arteries, and the superfluous quantity is absorbed by vessels appointed for that purpose; that which remains being of use to prevent the tunica albuginea and vaginalis from growing together; but when by any means the absorption is prevented, an accumulation naturally takes place. This may happen at any time of life; nay sometimes children are born with it. We are not as yet able to determine with certainty the cause of this disease; though as in it the spermatic vessels are very often found varicose, Ruysch has conjectured that such a state of these vessels produces the disease. In general we are certain that whatever causes prevent the due absorption of the liquid aboveintioned, must likewise produce this kind of hydrocele; and, when these causes operate with great great violence, as in the case of bruises and hurts, the disease will come on very suddenly, and increase to a great bulk in a very short time. The hydrocele of the vaginal coat, when produced by any internal cause, discovers itself by a fulness about the inferior part of one of the testicles, the parts growing gradually more tense as the disease advances; and the shape of the tumor itself changing from...
